Official Discord Mod Team Response to Reddit Accusations

[This is a coordinated statement by the OHSD MOD TEAM, led by myself, entirely unaffiliated with the HOMESTUCK TEAM but some informational points have been independently verified with Homestuck Staff. Footnotes including links and images will be posted in the first reply to this thread. The thread will temporarily be locked and will open once the footnotes have been posted.]
I wanted to go through some things about the Reddit post (1) because this situation now directly references my team in many ways, doing everything that it can to paint us as frivolous and malicious reporters, as well as implying other things about our processes and sowing distrust in our community. While I am the primary writer of this post, it has been supplemented and proofread by the available members of the mod team.

There's not an easy way to talk about this, I think the forums are the best we can do.

Most importantly, I need to get the intentions of the team completely clear. It is one hundred percent false that our goal is/was to get the Homestuck Subreddit taken down, and the Reddit Team (read: Makin) releasing this announcement on 4/13 is misleading, fearmongering, and very intentionally placed.

Our hope in the messages leaked is, and always has been, to remove Makin as the main owner of the Homestuck community sphere. We had neither past nor present intentions of taking down the subreddit or any of its forks such as Psycholonials or Althomestuck, and the only reports individuals of this team made against the UHSD were reports of bigoted messages across the server— never the copyright claim(s) which were cited in its removal. We were not the reason that the Discord was taken down, we were completely and utterly uninvolved with Makin taking down and then making homestuck.net redirect, and we have no interest in having community resources or outside community servers and spaces removed.

My Statement

First off, I personally (speaking as cytochrome and not for any other team members) do believe that the chats are shocking or appear unprofessional without their context. However, all of these things were obviously said in private with no intent of ever being spoken about publicly or representing finalized decisions of the team. These chats are conversational and personal in tone because they were known as a place for mods to bring up their own private concerns and grievances. The unofficial homestuck discord and some of the people who run it have been a source of pain for many of us in ways that are not all my stories to share. People are allowed to be happy in private when their harassers face consequences. Furthermore, it should go without saying that it's deeply unsettling that our private conversations have been leaked for a myriad of reasons: initially to doxx prominent team members, and now to hedge claims that we are intentionally trying to destroy a fandom space.

On the Mod Team Reporting the UHSD

Members of our team did, in fact, report posts from the Unofficial Homestuck Discord back before it was taken down. It was not a coordinated effort as server moderators at all, but as concerned individuals that could not stomach being bystanders to behavior that had been reported to us directly or often experienced personally, and these reports were not directly called for by higher-ups. Individual members of the team of their own concern reported posts there for harassment and bullying to discord as violation of basic TOS, as this is what we very often were witness to or victims of.

The unofficial discord was an incredibly hostile place, and did not make many attempts to remove bigoted language and hate speech. Makin even says as much in his Reddit post, citing transparency. Most frequently we would report posts containing slurs and disparaging talk about others to Discord (such as calls for harassment or killing, claims of pedophilia or grooming, etc.). Partnered servers are held to a standard which UHSD continually failed to uphold, allowing damaging and defamatory discussions of many regular users, members of official homestuck team and staff, and Andrew themself in increasingly concerning reports.

"Transparency" as an excuse not to remove bigoted speech simply is not a goal you can abide by when managing a Discord community server, because they are held strictly to Discord's Community Guidelines (2). Furthermore, the claim that the mod team did not engage in this behavior is not only known to be false, but Makin continues to provide a space for a known neo-nazi who was once on his mod team. (3)

We urge anyone in any fandom spaces, Homestuck or otherwise: please remember to report bigotry in whatever method a platform allows. Sometimes it's hard when it's the only thing that can be done, but it is always better than being a bystander.

Makin misattributed the server going down to the mod team.

Makin, in his original announcement about the takedown of the Unofficial Homestuck Discord, publicly stated that the takedown reason given to him was copyright infringement. (4) This lines up with the behavior exhibited by their server, where they would almost weekly be putting up announcements for movie nights. Even though they were often held on an external program, it is against Discord's TOS to link to pirated content such as movies or games. This was further confirmed by a member of their own team as an unfortunate possible reason for the server's takedown.

While it is possible that our reports of bigotry and harassment in messages could have added to the case against the server to Discord, it was clearly not the primary reasoning behind the removal. That lies between whichever party submitted the copyright claim and Makin himself.

The claim that the team used alt accounts to mass-report is blatantly unfounded and untrue. The screenshot of our chat from which this claim is taken, edited into the pinned post beneath the full document, is referring to making reports similar to that of the aforementioned-by-makin RIPBOZO413 twitter account (5), which is an anonymous user posting many screenshots of the unsavory behavior left unchecked in the UHSD. Furthermore, while two members briefly entertain the idea in the screenshot as individual suggestions, this is an idea that was never actioned upon by them or others, and does not continue before or after this point in the logs. I simply do not understand where they pull the term mass-report from here, this is most of the discussion and there are people in the logs surrounding this saying not to bother.

I have to remind you: this mod chat is a forum for moderators to both speak about actionable reports from our own server, and also serves as a private log for mods to informally discuss broader community concerns that we should keep eyes on, as well as discuss our own experiences within them. Many ideas are shared in attempts to help ongoing stressful situations, many ideas are turned down or never acted upon day by day. This is the nature of any mod chat, and ours is no different.

Why did Makin do this?

I would like to implore people to look into the reasons why things like this get posted in certain ways and at certain times.
We have recently dealt with these screenshot leaks in the last few weeks and this information has been available to the reddit team for at least one month, if not longer. If the team were truly panicked at the idea that we are launching a takeover, then why did they wait to post until now? 4/13 was evidently chosen as a day the community celebrates en masse, and used in order to share these claims across social media when controversy would get the most traction with the least context. There is a longstanding distrust of the team perpetuated by Makin and the people he chooses to defend, and this post thoroughly capitalizes upon it.
At the same time, the homestuck.net services are wiped, and all redirected back to the reddit post. I have independently verified with the Homestuck team that nothing was done on their end to cause this. Makin took it down of his own volition (6), and quietly omits the truth of this in order to directly insinuate that it was a takedown by the Homestuck team themselves, only admitting as much after four days of radio silence. While he will claim that he did so due to pressure from Andrew's screenshots in the document, those statements and sentiments were never made public, are from two months ago, and only acted upon on 4/13. He knew most people would be on his hook that day, and intentionally took the site down at this time in order to incite panic.

Shortly after the reddit announcement, the comments on the hs.net twitter post were limited to prevent people from continuing to share their own stories of harassment regarding the UHSD/subreddit or call into question the intentions of his post. For the duration of 4/13, the subreddit had been limited, so that any post you try to make needs to be approved by a mod before being published, and a "hostile takeover inbound" badge (7) was applied to every post. I have spoken to several people who have had their comments removed on the subreddit for speaking out against the subreddit and discord for their previous hosting of harassment. The announcement post itself maintains an overwhelmingly upset comment section who is being actively misled by its contents to believe that the HS Subreddit may go down, and other homestuck-affiliated subreddits panicking that they may similarly be removed.

Regarding The Restraining Order

This next bit will be very difficult for me to discuss, as the restraining order served against an individual that was mentioned in the reddit post is a delicate legal matter, and the public revealing of this information that has been done by leaking the messages is illegal. This information was given to a private channel of people who were relevant parties, because there were several instances of this individual going after the mod team. Very, very relevant things are missing from the Reddit post regarding this situation, which is bound to happen when you source your screenshots from a leaker who is attempting to make someone look as bad as possible. Here's a timeline with the information I am allowed to provide. Name and pronouns are kept anonymous, and anyone with questions or wishing to discuss this within the thread should do the same.

- - The individual (I will refer to them as D) has a history of publishing defamatory and false information about not only Andrew but anyone on the Homestuck team that they can, and does so not only on their one most notorious account, but a multitude of others which can be traced back to a sole owner.
- - Enough evidence of doxxing, attempts to hack, harassment, and otherwise deplorable behavior that they are more well-known for is put forth and a temporary restraining order is granted and set to be served. This temporary restraining order would only be in place in the time it takes for a court hearing to be held. In their state, this means that a police officer will knock at their address to serve papers. This proceeding varies state-by-state. Vibri speaks to the mod chat, as we are relevant to be kept informed, letting us know that the first attempt to serve papers will be that night.
- - Several days go by, and Vibri is told after inquiring that D is avoiding service and nobody is answering the door. It is only after several attempts that Vibri is informed by Andrew's lawyer that D's family may be hesitant due to their citizenship status. Notably, this status does NOT make them at risk of deportation, but she is told this information as a probable cause for the delays due to the current political climate.
- - Internally and unseen to the mod-chat, staff has a discussion and decides that while they want D to cease their behavior, it is an unwanted side effect to cause stress to their family, who are innocent parties. However, it is impossible for the serving of papers to be called off at this stage in the process, and they still wanted to seek protection, as the staff are still victims of their criminal stalking.
- - Vibri mentions that this may be the reason for delays in the mod chat after being asked for a status update on papers being served, as D was still actively posting about the team during this time despite confirmation that officers had attempted and failed to serve papers for close to a week. In the screenshot it is inferred as though she knew the whole time, it is simply worded incorrectly. She found out about this after several attempts were made to serve temporary papers.
- - It took several more days for confirmation that D was served, and staff decided not to pursue heavy legal action. D and the Homestuck team reach a settlement after deliberation with their lawyers, which is forgiving to D and does not go on their permanent record, while also providing protections to the victims. The terms and conditions of this settlement legally cannot be explained further. Vibri's public message on the matter will be shown below (8).

Given this timeline, and the sensitive nature of this case, a few things need to be said on behalf of the mod team. We were not the ones to serve the restraining order and do not speak on behalf of the most heavily affected party. The mod team is composed of many marginalized people including immigrants. We had zero desire to turn to the police, the Homestuck team did so because it was the only way to get papers served for a proper hearing, and it was done against a prolific and well-known harasser of the team who would otherwise go completely unchecked. None of us were happy about causing stress to an immigrant family, none of us were happy to work with police in any capacity as can be gleaned by the complaints about their dysfunction, and the Homestuck team, independently of anything said in mod chat, decided to reach a settlement which did not harm more people. I have seen people calling all sorts of blatantly wrong things about the mod team based on these screenshots. ICE was never involved in any capacity, nor did we want them to be. While we expressed positive sentiment to D being served, it was because D has actively done illegal things to doxx team members, spread statements about members of the mod team, and caused many instances of other people harassing the mod team on behalf of their statements. We simply wanted to have any way we could to put a stop to this individual, as reporting their worst posts for hate speech, transphobia, racism and posting illegal content led to no results. This was not a joyful time for us, and we only hope despite the harassment we have faced at their behest, that D is given the space they deserve away from being used as a shield by Makin and others. The fact that this was done is beyond morally wrong, and those who knowingly spread this sensitive legal information should be ashamed. Makin leaking this information does no service to D and only further puts them at risk — another startling show of someone willing to put others in harm's way if he thinks it may benefit his greater goals.

Our mod team is intentionally being painted as irrational for genuine responses to intense harassment.

In regards to the screenshots leaked addressing Gio (9), I asked for discordant's own comment.

> I meant and stand by everything I said. When I said "giovanh co-ordinated a harassment campaign, which escalated into a sexual harassment campaign" i meant "giovanh co-ordinated a harassment campaign, which escalated into a sexual harassment campaign". I do not retract this because there is a level of proof that is completely irrefutable. The fandom decided that sexual harassment was fine at the time, and neither Makin nor GiovanH showed an iota of regret over said sexual harassment.

Giovanh is known to the mod team as someone who uses "journalism" as a cover for real, identifiable harm, who actively obfuscates his involvement in harassment campaigns and uses sensationalist language to further attack heavily-targeted individuals who are on record as no longer wishing to be brought into public discussion of Homestuck. Posting this batch of messages by discordantObserver is not only once again bringing this other private individual back into public discussion by proxy, but is attempting to paint someone in a poor light for being protective of a trans woman who was verifiably doxxed and harassed.

I do not want Makin as a community leader.

To speak for myself again rather than the team:
I strongly believe that this post was orchestrated by Makin for what he seems to view as his own benefit. It is posted using the AutoModerator so that no responsibility can be taken, and heavily defends him while endangering people personally affected by his past actions and inactions, without giving any credence to the claims against him and the harm past and present done to the community. I believe that Makin is an individual who negatively impacts this community and I would prefer that someone else hold responsibility for his community spaces, including the subreddit. I don't even necessarily want it to be held officially. I want it to be held by someone who won't sit idly by while threats of harassment, false claims of crimes, discussions of doxxing attempts and rampant bigotry are allowed to build up within their community. I stand by Andrew's, Vibri's, and any other involved choices in the banning of Makin from the official server, as they are people who were personally victimized by the harassment campaigns that he facilitates and the actions he takes such as this one.

In closing, I would like people to more thoroughly investigate the lack of context that the Reddit post takes use of in order to manipulate the audience into upset on what would otherwise be a great day of festivity in the fandom. These screenshots and others of similar quality have been leaked by a hostile party within the last few weeks, and are being re-used to tell a certain narrative. The mod team does not agree with the ways in which the Unofficial Discord was managed, and while many of us take great discomfort with Makin being the owner of these spaces, it will never be our intent to tear down community-run spaces or take them for our own. There is no hostile takeover. Discord and other social medias do not do a good enough job with their handling of reports to bring any justice to harassment. The discord was not taken down by the mod team, the reddit will not be taken down by the mod team. If this reddit post and the actions Makin has taken to withhold community resources on a whim is any indication, Makin is a poor community leader for Homestuck, and I stand by my conviction that while I do not have the power to depose him, I would rather his community space be run by someone who doesn't allow hate to fester.

The discord has been incredibly active recently, obviously, because it was 4/13. The wild and fast nature of Discord led to several of the mods deciding to delete messages and timeout people discussing this announcement in the morning when it was released. Those that joined and immediately started to talk about this topic with no other message history were quick-trigger banned because that is the way they are told to handle emergency situations before the rest of the mod team has been informed and are able to respond. I have been seeing some complaining about this, which I do understand, and people who were hit by this are free to appeal their bans, as is the case for all those who are banned. Ban appeal form will be linked below. (10)
It is not our intent to restrict conversation in the discord or forums about this situation, but we will continue to moderate and shut down any hostile attempts to force conversation in this direction. If you can calmly and cordially discuss this with others, then we have no qualms with you and others continuing the topic. We don't only allow those who agree with us, so long as your points do not disparage others or attempt to insult the team.

further notes added post-writeup with no clear point to be added in:*
- during the creation of this response, Makin has increasingly thrown his weight around to incite harassment against Vibri, by gating the Homestuck.net website with a password necessitating that you answer this riddle. This is childish and withholding resources from people who do not want to engage in this dramatic reddit document.

- -He has also changed the post banner of the Homestuck's old.reddit page to be a screenshot of our mod chat with a DMCA badge, insinuating that these messages show proof of us filing copyright claims against his server, when if anything they emphasize that there had been so many issues with it, and so much bad behavior emboldened and accepted, that there were multiple independent parties reporting them before the discussion in the mod chat started. And again, all of our reports were based on harassment and bigotry as opposed to DMCA from hosting movie streams. Nothing about our reports were related to copyright claims, and he will not be able to provide any evidence suggesting as such.

  (1) Makin's Reddit announcement, posted on 4/13 to the r/Homestuck subreddit alongside a lockdown of homestuck.net and restricted post access to the subreddit.

(2) Discord's Community Guidelines and additional rules for Community Servers. Community servers are a type of server that can be found through Discord's Discovery Program. You must apply to discord in order to become a Community Server, and therefore are meant to be upheld to stricter standards than private servers.

(3) Post to the forums by RIPBOZO created on 4/19/26 detailing further examples of poor behavior in the UHSD. Of note, one user who was a mod for some time, Kaliwete, has a good few screenshots listed here promoting ethnic cleansing, racist sentiments and eugenics. Kaliwete is also more recently listed in a large group of people invited personally to a "refugee" server, created after UHSD was taken down.

(4) Statement by Makin following the takedown of the server, wherein he admits that the server was taken down on a copyright claim.
(foot-footnote: It is also mentioned that the discord.gg/homestuck vanity url was taken by an unrelated party after the cooldown for URL holding lapsed. It was taken by a scambot server since it was a URL with high clickrates, and had to be taken back by OHSD in order to prevent security risks to those attempting to find our server.)
(5) Video created by an anonymous party RIPBOZO413 and released on twitter after the UHSD was taken down, with a plethora of screenshots from that server.
(6) Makin admitting several days after the fact that he took homestuck.net down and caused it to redirect to his Reddit post.

If you were redirected here from homestuck.net and are confused, you may want to read the post above. The below only applies to homestuck.net.

Done?

Why was the site gone for five days?

Essentially I'm being threatened by Andrew Hussie to "stop hosting his work" over unrelated drama, and took the site down to protect it:

https://i.imgur.com/VbS00lf.png

I'm the creator of and have maintained HS.net (and other stuff) over the last decade. Fair use law usually protects archive sites like the Wayback Machine, and 95% of the site is fan-content. The little that isn't (e.g. the lost Paradox Space comics) is not currently for sale anywhere.

But this is Andrew Hussie, a known legal troll who apparently wants to direct all fans to his communities by attacking all others. As documented above, Hussie's team recently took down our old Discord server with mass reports, taking our invite URL. They then starting reporting this subreddit, alongside this message.

I think homestuck.net is just another piece of leverage for him right now. I had to temporarily redirect it to protect it from takedown notices.

Why is it back?

I finally got some free time now that it's the weekend (I have a full-time job unlike the 46 year old millionaire harassing us). I removed everything Hussie could realistically complain about, and finally made a new Discord to replace the old one. We might still get the old one back if Discorp gets back to me, but it's stupid to keep everything in private sites, transparency is good.

We are still in danger, Hussie will send DMCAs without reason (warrant canaries here).

I may restore all content after the site is truly safe again, ideally with a blanket permission for fansites like mine that I can put up on the about page. Archive fansites shouldn't be held hostage.

(7) "Hostile takeover inbound" badge applied to EVERY post on the subreddit, including as of writing on 4/19/2026, for a full WEEK after the initial reddit post.

i am literally not allowed to speak about the details of this because its a confidential legal matter but when we found out that D's family were immigrants* we stopped perusing a restraining order and decided to soften the approach by settling it out of court so that it would not go on D's permanent record and D would not be in danger, but we were not going to drop a case against someone who had stalked doxxed and harassed the team for almost a decade. Very strange how much dedication these people have to smear and harass individuals over a piece of media they don't even own. You and the rest of the team have shown real dedication in both the revival and preservation of Homestuck after years of it rotting away from VIZ Media. I'm sure Homestuck.net and other sites like the unofficial collection did their best during the time when HS was unreadable during it's VIZ era. Really stupid to blame the author over your own stupidity of streaming pirated movies in a server that's not even directly affiliated with the media it's claiming to represent. And even if it was true, if an author wants to retain ownership of their work and community based on their work why shouldn't they? What's the point of going through all of this trouble on a piece of media you didn't even make??

Sorry to hear they've caused so much trouble to everyone on the team, not just Andrew. Glad yall are willing to shed some light on the situation despite having to deal with people like Makin and others.

inb4 the chuds who for some reason care more about the sanctity of Fandom spaces crawl their way over here to fence sit like you've never seen before on a very clear cut and dry example of a man facing the consequences of his actions. Makin and Gio have both been terrible people who harass and bully other people in this fandom for years, but for some reason people think their contributions to Homestuck just absolve them of any wrong doing. I am glad that Hussie has a support system of people around her willing to help her fight back against the people who have been seriously harassing her and her friends for so, so long.

Addition:
Like, I think something about this entire fiasco that annoys the hell out of me personally are people who are just ignoring the ongoing harassment that this man has put forth, his outward transphobia towards Andrew Hussie, and just EVERYTHING else he has done and the community he has fostered. Hussie wrote in that post that they were banning him for good and even explained WHY, and yet there are people on that reddit and on the FRAF forum about this issue saying Hussie is a bully who's just doing this to be petty, it is as if nobody saying that actually read what Hussie wrote at all and just have been repeating shit from word of mouth, like a terrible transmysoginistic game of telephone where in we all just ignore whatever was said by the original person to make up our own point.

Why does NOBODY who is against Hussie care about Makin and his harassment of Hussie at all? Why does everyone just skirt around it as if it's no big deal? Is it perhaps because they don't believe Hussie, or they don't think it even really is a big deal? It infuriates me. And Makin has just made this entire community worse over the years. I remember when Homestuck 2 was first coming out, I found I couldn't even enjoy talking about Homestuck or getting into Homestuck at all because every where I went there were more bigots then there used to be, and they all congregated in the spaces HE made. I watched the Homestuck fandom go from a very happy and positive space that encouraged all sorts of creativity to a hateful, closed off fandom that actively hated it's own source material practically over night and it was literally because of people like Makin being at the helm of some of the places where people talk about Homestuck the most.

I think everyone who is just willing to ignore Makin's overt bigotry and the fact that he is so welcoming to bad actors (a LITERAL Nazi on his team btw!!! A NAZI) are just like him and feel the Homestuck fandom should return to that dark, dark time where transphobia and racism ran rampant. To that I say, GOOD RIDDANCE.

You know, what's even the endgoal here? Just to bully Hussie because of shit that happened like 7+ years ago? Or do they hate the comic that much?

I remember back when the UHC thing happened i was fully supporting Gio, but the more i learn and the more time passes, the more ridiculous this becomes.

I'm so sorry for everyone on the team(s) that has been affected by them for years. Both the official server and the forums have provided a better community than UHD and probably the subreddit could ever offer (probably because i never actively used it) and because of that I'm grateful to you all.

makin will keep trying to start shit and his supporters will keep trying to steer the pot, but i know the bigger community will support you. as someone in the other thread said, were all tired of a community driven by hatred and animosity.

best wishes to all of you.

thank you for this. its been really annoying to watch people fall for something thats been written in such a disgustingly sinister and calculated manner to obscure as much of the fact of the matter as possible. the fact being, as beloved as community spaces are, makin is obviously not equipped to handle a community space when he doesnt even like the subject of community as it stands. unless he wants to suggest that shilling for stalker blogs is a form of his own love for homestuck, somehow.

as a former regular of makins discord, the HSOD has been a breath of fresh air in comparison. its nice to talk to people who actually like homestuck and are willing to engage earnestly with the people behind it.

the transparency from the mod team and community managers of HSOD is appreciated, and i can only hope that more people will be willing to hear you all out.

This is crazy, I wish people could just be normal sometimes but I'm very glad at least you guys have put out a statement explaining things in the proper way unlike some.

I was hoping them deleting comments was just a me thing because mine was also removed for calling out that the homestuck reddit/discord was the epicentre of the harassment back in the early hs2 days.

Gee... who would've guessed that leaked screenshots could be out of context or made to frame things in a certain way. Should be no surprise considering those also made their way to other awesome and friendly online imageboards weeks before the reddit post. So many nice people helping information get around ♥.

Not gonna lie though, I wonder if Makin knew about this or just took the leaked messages at face value. Not saying it excuses how he responded afterwards or dissolved anything that came before but I'm not sure I would hold it against him for being misguided by it. I mean, if someone leaked those messages then they likely had an agenda in this as well, right? I'm curious as to what other people think of this.

And that's about it.

I may have missed it, But what riddle?

Foreshadowing is a narrative device in which suggestions or warnings about events to come are dropped or planted. Foreshadowing often appears at the beginning of a story, and it helps develop or subvert the audience's expectations about upcoming events.

I get we're all mad at Makin but please consider what I'm trying to say. Of course the leak benefits Makin and was used in that way, I'm not calling him a neutral party, and I still condone how he went about responding to this, but I can't say in good faith the whole situation is all 100% his fault if there's a leaker out there who not only shared those private messages around in bad faith but also likely in a misguiding way too just to instigate more drama and lolcowing. It's one thing to recieve a leak of a complete log of conversations from the moderator channel (in that case I would give Makin no excuses) and another to recieve a leak curated to paint the people affected in a certain light, and unless Makin himself made those screenshots, I don't think it's unreasonable to say there's a chance, of whichever size it may be, that maybe both the official server's mods and Makin were victims of that leak.

What I'm saying is just speculation on my part and not a declaration of my full thoughts on this matter. I'm well aware that Makin did those things and I don't support his permanence in the position he's in. Trust me, I also think it'd be best if he just moved on from the HS fandom. And I don't want this post to make it seem like I'm giving him a pass to get away without any blame because "boo hoo he was tricked by an evil leaker!" There's already many reasons to want him gone from the fandom and to resent him for the things he allowed in his server and subreddit, but I fear there could be an attempt at shitstirring for the sake of shitstirring that I think is being overlooked, and though I have no proof of it, I wonder if looking into that could shed some light on the situtation.

Maybe it's a fruitless pursuit because it might never get clarified and that's okay, but for the sake of fair discussion I hope it doesn't get ignored.

And that's about it.

Does she? She seems to be biased towards Gio and Makin no matter what. I say this cus Like, she dismissed WhatPumpkin employees trying to come forward because she claimed they were "clout-chasing" iirc.

DISCLAIMER: Its been a while since I saw the video, but I swear she said they were clout-chasing

I dont think this needs to be a youtube video. Is that really necessary? Especially a video from Sarah Z, who presents herself as reputable yet dismissed potential sources? do we want this to be some big youtube drama people are not going to even watch and just use this vid as noise while they do chores or draw? i dont think so

If anyone makes a video, and they don't do proper research. The public will be misinformed
It could be as easy as "oH fRaF iS jUsT a StUpId FoRm, i dOn'T nEeD tO LoOk aT iT" then boom a ton of people online will correct you with false info

In all fairness, both Homestuck videos by Sarah are some of the most viewed videos on Youtube related to Homestuck. Most people who haven't even read the comic got most of the information on the drama from the those videos so I'm not entirely wrong on asking her to make a follow up. Than again she probably doesn't care about all this drama anyways, she's too busy making documentaries on Nebula.
